

Taking a closer look.

» Together, the ice sheets in Greenland and Antarctica contain enough freshwater to raise global sea level by more than 60 meters if they were to melt entirely and transfer to the world's oceans.